

16 million million

adults in the U.S. live with major depression. That is 6.9% of the population.

Depression is a Serious Illness

Depression is not a sign of weakness or a character flaw. If you are suffering with depression, help is available. Call 800-245-7013 to talk to a behavioral health care specialist.

Depression is more than sadness.

We all feel sad from time to time. It's a normal temporary reaction to upsetting experiences in life. Depression is different. When a person has depression, it interferes with daily life—eating, sleeping, working and more. It affects not just the person with depression, but also those who care about them. Most people who experience depression need treatment to get better.

Know the signs and symptoms

If you experience any of the following symptoms for two weeks or longer, you may have depression:

- Persistent sad, anxious, or “empty” mood
- Feelings of hopelessness, guilt, worthlessness
- Loss of interest or pleasure in hobbies and activities
- Difficulty sleeping, fatigue
- Difficulty concentrating, remembering

Understanding depression

There are different types of depression and they can impact people in different ways. It is best to start treatment early, but it’s important to know all forms of depression can be treated. Some forms of depression are:

- Major depression—severe symptoms that interfere with the ability to work, sleep, study, eat and enjoy life.
- Persistent depressive disorder—a depressed mood that lasts for at least two years.
- Postpartum depression—more serious than the normal “baby blues” many women experience after giving birth.
- Seasonal affective disorder (SAD)—depression sets in during the winter months, when there is less natural sunlight. The depression typically fades during spring and summer.

Treatment

Depression is usually treated with medicines and/or talk therapy (psychotherapy). Typically, there is some trial and error to find the right medication because no two people are affected the same way by depression. It can take several weeks of treatment before you begin to feel better. It is essential to follow your doctor’s treatment plan to keep depression from returning.

If you think a loved one has depression

The most important thing you can do for a friend or family member is help them get a diagnosis and treatment. Encourage your loved one to stay in treatment or seek different treatment options if no improvement occurs after 6-8 weeks. Other ways you can help:

- Offer emotional support, patience and understanding.
- Listen carefully and never dismiss comments about suicide.
- Invite your loved one out for walks and outings. Keep trying even if they decline, but don’t push.
- Offer hope and remind them that with time and treatment, the depression will lift.

It can be hard asking for help. Some things you could say: “I haven’t been myself lately, and I’d like to talk to the provider about it.” Or “I think I might be depressed, and I’d like some help.”

Every situation is different; there are resources available to help:

- If you are having thoughts of death or suicide, contact the National Suicide Prevention Lifeline at 800-273-8255 or call 911 immediately.
- Find the right provider for your situation and/or get one-on-one support via a licensed behavioral health care specialist by calling 800-245-7013.
- Talk with your doctor to find the right treatment options.
